Getting in Gear for a New School Year

A new school year is just around the corner, and with it comes the return of an organized schedule. Are you ready to help your child succeed? Parents who play an active role in their children's education make a huge difference in their success. Here are some things you can do to help your child prepare for the upcoming school year.

Plan daily activities. Let your child pick out clothes for the next day, plan and pack lunches, and make a schedule of the day's activities.

Re-establish bedtime and mealtime routines. During the summer, your child may have had the freedom to stay up late and have meals anytime. Start the transition back to your school routine now.

Provide healthy meals. Studies show that children who eat healthy, balanced breakfasts and lunches are able to concentrate and perform better in school.

Encourage activities that inspire learning. One of the easiest ways to get your child focused on school again is to limit technology time and encourage your child to read, do puzzles, or complete an art project.

Prepare a study area. Set up a special place at home to do school work and homework. Always show an interest in your child's work.

Communicate with teachers and the school. Many times, people are inclined to contact their child's school only if there is a problem. Contact your child's teachers at the start of the school year and let them know you want to be an active partner in helping your student learn and grow.

Look for signs that your child may be struggling. Even with full support at home, children can have social, behavioral or academic challenges at school. Should your child display any signs of anxiety, anger, neediness, disinterest, or lack of motivation, arrange a time to meet with your child's school and teacher.

Get your child a tutor. If your child is struggling with academics, talk to their teacher or counselor for a tutoring recommendation. Sometimes a little additional help outside of the classroom can go a long way.

Thinking of getting a tutor? Ten questions you must ask

Retrieved from www.greatschools.org

Tutoring has become a multibillion-dollar industry, offering struggling and successful students alike a wealth of educational resources. Asking the right questions can make all the difference in choosing a tutor for your child.

Here are 10 questions to point you in the right direction:

1. Who will do the tutoring? When dealing with a tutoring company, you are trusting it to hire the right person for your child — so be sure you agree with the company's philosophy. Find out how much say you have in selecting a tutor and how the company determines which one is appropriate for your child.

2. What are the tutor's qualifications? It's not necessary that an instructor be a credentialed teacher for your child's grade level. But he should have experience teaching the subject your child needs help with. The prospective tutor should also have experience teaching children of similar ages and learning styles to your kid's.

3. What is the tutor's track record? In addition to asking for references from teachers or other parents, request evidence of the tutor's success in raising student achievement such as higher test results, improved classroom grades, better homework completion, and satisfaction surveys of students or parents.

4. Where will the sessions take place? Whether your child is tutored at school, an office, a community center, or someone's home, you need to be comfortable with the location. If you've chosen online tutoring, make sure your child has access to a computer, headset, or other necessary equipment.

5. How many students will be tutored at a time? While some students thrive in small groups, others do better with one-on-one instruction. Be sure your choice can provide a setting that works for your child's particular learning style.

6. How will the tutor measure your child's progress? Ask how the tutor will devise a study plan that's right for your child and assess whether goals are achieved. If the tutor provides written reports, request a sample so you can be sure they are clear and helpful.

7. How often will the tutor communicate with you and your child's teacher?

Ideally, they would communicate regularly and reinforce each other's techniques.

Be sure to let the teacher know about your child's tutoring, and ask if he can give feedback on your child's progress in the classroom. You will also need to establish a regular time when your child is not present to discuss her progress with the tutor.

8. What is the policy for cancellations and makeup sessions? Many private tutors charge clients if an appointment is canceled without 24-hour notice. Others have detailed policies for scheduling makeup sessions. Be sure to clarify with your tutor ahead of time.

9. What if your child doesn't improve? Find out what the necessary steps are for choosing another tutor within a company and the deadline to make the switch. Does the tutor guarantee certain results? How are they measured? What happens if your child doesn't achieve them?

10. How can you reinforce your child's learning? Tutoring isn't a magic bullet, so parents play an important role in helping those lessons stick. Ask the tutor for suggestions on how you can support your child's learning. Better yet, check in at the end of each session to find out what your child is expected to do before the next one, whether it's practicing multiplication facts or completing all classroom assignments.

Creating Healthy Lunches

How children eat today has a noticeable impact on their health throughout adolescence and adulthood. Consuming nutritious foods help children and teens grow, develop, do well academically, and feel good about themselves. Good nutrition also helps prevent issues such as eating disorders, obesity, dental cavities, and iron-deficiency anemia. The website, ChooseMyPlate.gov is one of many resources available to parents to help them learn about nutritional eating. It is full of practical information to help build healthier diets with resources and tools for dietary assessment, nutrition education, and other user-friendly nutrition information.

The MyPlate icon was designed with the intent to prompt consumers to think about building a healthy plate at meal times. It emphasizes the fruit, vegetable, grains, protein foods, and dairy groups and demonstrates portions for each category.

A healthy diet starts one day at a time. Children need a healthy balance of protein, carbs, and healthy fats for sustained energy and optimal learning. Foods such as whole grains, brown rice, fruits, and veggies provide a good source of healthy carbohydrates, while Greek yogurt, cheese, eggs, meats, and beans provide much needed protein. That's why providing children a balance and variety of these foods will help ensure that they're well-nourished and energized to learn.

Sandwiches

Sandwiches can be part of a healthy lunch if they're put together creatively; try using bagels, rolls, pita pockets, English muffins, raisin, or multigrain bread instead of white bread. Chicken, tuna, and egg salads are great sources of protein, just go light on the mayonnaise.

- Luncheon meats, such as lean cuts of ham, roast beef, or turkey, can also provide a good source of protein. Use thick slices of meat instead of thin ones, and make sure they're low in fat (under 95 percent) and low sodium.
- Try adding granola and raisins to a peanut butter and jelly sandwich.
- Throw in vegetables whenever possible. Try lettuce, spinach, onions, or bean sprouts.
- If you want to add condiments, try mustard instead of mayonnaise. If butter or salad dressing is your child's favorite, use low-fat versions.

Beverages

Use your child's drink as another source of nutrition in his lunchbox:

- Milk, providing plenty of calcium, is highly recommended as a daily beverage.
- Water is always a healthy option, as long as it's accompanied by another calcium-rich food.
- Fruit juices are okay on occasion, but make sure they're 100 percent juice.
- Stay away from fruit punch or soda.

Snacks

Instead of giving your child sweets, supplement his lunch with these healthy sides:

- An apple or banana
- Whole-wheat pretzels or crackers
- Baked potato chips
- Granola bars (watch out for sugar content)
- Dried fruit
- Nuts
- Carrots and low-fat dip
- Yogurt
- Applesauce
- Raisins

COMMAND/UNIT UPDATES

416th TEC Teen Council

On 29 June 2015 three members of the 416th TEC teen council traveled to Boston, MA to participate in a joint teen council meeting with teens from USACAPOC(A), 108th TC, and the 316th ESC. Avante J., Grace F., and Marcus M. joined 16 other teens from across the country at the Embassy Suites Boston for a welcome session and brief teambuilding session to kick-off the program. The first breakout session that evening allowed for formal introductions to one other since Avante and Marcus were two new members to the council. The teens wrote down what they hoped to accomplish while at the meeting, and then rejoined the rest of the teens ready for an exciting and eventful week.

The teens trained heavily on resilience. The intent of the Teen Resilience Training program is to provide Army Families with a common language around resilience and performance skills that can facilitate discussion about day-to-day challenges. Teenage children are a major component of the Family dimension within our Soldier's lives. The group also went on a service learning project to the VFW where they assisted the Heartillery Group packing boxes full of donated goods to be shipped to deployed Soldiers. The group of teen and adult volunteers accomplished in two hours what it would have taken the Heartillery group six months to finish.

On the last night the teens briefed out a panel of family programs directors, coordinators, and a COL representing USACAPOC(A). The teens discussed issues that were important to them such as an Army Reserve youth scholarship, financial aid for college, a teen council newsletter, and more joint teen council meetings. The youth voice is an invaluable resource when deciding what programs will most benefit our Soldiers and Families. At the final breakout for the week the three members of the 416th TEC Teen Council each stated that they had accomplished the goals they wrote down on the first night—a success!

Because of the geographical dispersion of Army Reserve units many AR teens don't have the opportunity to interact with other AR youth. Events such as the joint teen council meeting give AR youth a chance to meet and form lasting relationships with other teens who have the same shared experience.

Marcus M., Avante J., and Grace F., members of the 416th Teen Council, packing boxes, and writing cards at the VFW in Boston, MA for deployed Soldiers as well as Veterans participating in Honor Flight, a program taking Veterans of WWII to Washington D.C. to tour the National Monuments.

COMMAND/UNIT UPDATES

389th Engineer Company Family Day

389th Engineer Company joined with Family members, friends and well-wishers at the Armed Forces Reserve Center in Middletown, Iowa, 12 July 2015, to celebrate the unit's annual Family Day. Family day is a time that is set aside for commanders to provide Soldiers and their Families with important information that will assist them if/when their Soldier faces a deployment. Informational briefings and trainings were provided, as well as material was given to Families for them to refer to in the future. This was also a time for Families to ask questions and learn more about the command's mission and the Army Reserve.

Families travel for a few hours of entertainment, light conversation and the chance to build upon the unit's community of trust. Child, Youth & School Services provided one of the briefings to the Soldiers and Family members present and hosted a marketing table. A CYSS staff member was available at the table to answer questions and provide information and resources to those in attendance. One outreach effort by CYSS staff at events is collecting needs assessments. This form provides CYSS and Family Programs with valuable information to better serve our Soldiers and their Families.

Family Day events are a great way to show the Families and youth that the Army cares about them, and they deserve the respect and recognition.

SSG Shauna Engle completes a CYSS needs assessment at the recent Family Day.
